Wayward Girls The Baltimore American of to day has the following:

"God pity them !" could be read on the countenances of the people who stood in Justice Sanner's court-room Saturday after noon as Ruby Adams and Jessie Moore were led back to their cells after a hearing. They were two young girls, decidedly good look ing, who had been found in one of the lowest of the low dives on the Hook, and were sent before the magistrate on the charge of vagrancy. Both were neatly dressed, and looked as if they had been brought up by fathers and mothers who loved them. They did not seem to realize their position until they were escorted back to the look up. Ruby and Jessie, according to their story, came from Hagerstown for the express pur-pose of leading lives of shame. They arpose of leading lives of shame. They arrived here on Thursday or Friday, and then went from one house of ill repute to another endeavoring to gain admittance as inmates. Time and again they were refused, presumably on account of their youthful appearance, but finally they went into the place from which they were taken. Ruby, in answering to a question, said she had been in a house of ill-repute at Hagerstown once. Jessie, however, had been in service, which she lately left. Both the girls were under nineteen years of age, they said, but they nineteen years of age, they said, but they ooked even younger than that.

"What induced you to come here?" asked

Lieut League of Jessie,
"I had to work hard," she replied, "and wanted an easier life." She said she was the daughter of a Hagerstown school teacher. Ruby said her father lived in Hagerstown. She, too, preferred a life in a house of ill repute to hard work. Judge Sanner committed both for a further hearing to-morrow. During the hearing both girls were very brave, but when once in their cells they both broke down and wept bitterly.

The girls were brought before Marshal to Captain Farnan, who placed the girls in a cell for safekeeping. The Marshal tele-graphed to the parents of the girls, but had received no answer up to a late hour last night. Should the parents fail to call for their children, the matron of the district, Mrs. McClelland, will take charge of them and give them a home.

A special from Hagerstown says: "A despatch came to night to The American cor-respondent, from Baltimore, asking about the lives of Ruby Adams and Jesse Moore.
These two girls do not live here, but are from Winchester, Va., and their real names are Virginia Harris and Fiora Rainezenburger. They were in this place, at a house of ill-re-pute, this week, and they went under the nmes of Bessie Hamilton and Ruby Moore. Chief of Police Benner received a letter from Winchester about two days ago, giving a description of the girls and the photograph of one of them, but, after diligent search, it was ascertained that they had both departed for Baitimore. Both are very young, and they are evidently passing under assumed names." The following is the letter:

WINCHESTER, Va, October 16.

My Dear Sir-On Monday night two young girls ran away from home, one of whom is my daughter, Virginia Haines. She answers to the bame of Jennie. She, in company with the other one, Flora Rainezenberger, are in your city now, but their ultimate destination is Baltimore. To-day I despatched my son-in-law, George W. Carl, in quest of them, but for fear he may fail, I write to ask you to at once take steps to apprehend and send her back to Winchester, or hold her and telegraph me, and I will come for her. I understand that they have changed their names, so as to better enable them to elude pursuit. Jennie is to be known as Bessie Hamilton, and Flora Rainezenberger as Ruby Moore. There is no doubt but they are enticed away by some of the members of your baseball club, who played here recently. They are both minors. They are both small, neat little things, nearly of the same age. Perhaps you will find them registered at one of the hotels or GEO. H. HAINES, boarding houses. Winchester, Va.
